

About The Graduate Center

A unique and distinguished intellectual partnership, The Graduate Center is the doctorate-granting institution for The City University of New York (CUNY). Here, 4,000 students and 1,600 faculty join in the shared enterprise of exploring and expanding the boundaries of knowledge within 30 doctoral programs in the humanities, social sciences and sciences. More than a third of the rated Ph.D. programs rank among the country's top 20. This remarkable environment of intellectual discovery and exchange is further augmented by 28 research centers and institutes focused on areas of compelling social, civic, cultural, and scientific concerns, from software design to human environments, from speech and hearing to music and theater, from women's studies to the United Nations. In addition, The Graduate Center offers six Master's degree programs and administers the CUNY Baccalaureate Program.

About the Bildner Center

Established in 1982, at the urging of philanthropist Albert Bildner, the Bildner Center works to achieve greater understanding of Latin America and the Caribbean, along with stimulating more fruitful inter-American relations. To accomplish these objectives, the Bildner Center promotes research, analysis, publications, and public fora focusing on major issues relating to the Western Hemisphere, both past and present. The Center pays particular attention to the analysis and dissemination of information to both experts and the general public, concerning issues relating to national and international public policy and how these policies contribute to poverty reduction, democratic governance, sustainable development, and human rights. The objective is to contribute to more in-

H.E. Fernando Henrique Cardoso

Fernando Henrique Cardoso served two terms as President of Brazil, from 1995 to 2002.

A sociologist trained at the University of São Paulo, he has been one of the world's most influential figures in the analysis of large-scale social change, international development, dependency, globalization, democracy, and state reform. Building on this successful intellectual and academic career, Cardoso became deeply involved in Brazil's struggle for democracy to overcome the authoritarian military regime from 1964 to 1985.

Elected senator of the state of São Paulo in 1982, he was a founding member of the Brazilian Social Democratic Party (PSDB). He served as Minister of Foreign Relations (1992–1993) and Minister of Finance (1993–1994).

Cardoso held the position of President of the International Sociological Association, and currently serves as Chairman of the Club of Madrid, co-Chairman of the Inter-American Dialogue and Professor-at-Large at Brown University.

Cardoso is an Honorary Member of the India International Centre, a member of the International Council of the Institute for European-Latin American Relations, a founding member, among others, of the World Association for International Relations, as well as a founding member and president of the Centro Brasileiro de Análise e Planejamento.

Professor Emeritus at the University of São Paulo, where he also held the Chair of Political Science, Cardoso has been awarded honorary degrees from several universities in Europe, Latin America, and the United States. His previously translated books include Dependency and Development in Latin America, São Paulo: Growth and Poverty, and The New World Economy in the Information Age.
